LITERARY

Five Dillard students are represented in the 1947 Anthology of College Poetry published by the National Poetry Association, 3210 Selby Ave., Los Angeles 34, California. The contributors and their entries are as follows: Dream—Richard L. Dockery (absent from picture); Loneliness—Countess W. Twitty (third from left); Determined Optimist—Dollie Marie Jefferson (second from left); I Counseled Wise—Arthur A. Zebbs (extreme right); Evening—Keith N. McKen (extreme left).

EVENING

Peace! Retiring into rest,
Dying embers with silence beauty-blest;
Calm, serene, a gentle sobbing lull,
Graceful as the easy sliding gull;
Slow, unhurried, time is set aside.

The colors float across the sky, Shading to the horizon; Blue, grey, dull but beautiful, Fading on the horizon.

But sadly and slowly comes the night.

Night, like Death, darkens the light...

Yet evening has passed, though ages has passed,

And always has found a morrow.

--Keith N. McKen, '51

I COUNSELLED WISE

With Saint and Sage I counseled wise,
To learn of man, his fall and rise.
The Saint with pray'r and solemn voice
Revealed the fall of Adam's choice.
The Sage with scroll and feathered pen,
Described the love and hopes of men.
I left the wise perturbed in thought,
From knowledge past which man had sought.

I sorrowed most and wept in shame, To find that Adam fell again; Again, Again, Again.

—Arthur A. Zebbs, '50

A DREAM

My dream is of a happy tomorrow, Tho' showers of troubles fall upon me, I'll not complain; I will equip Myself with a raincoat of faith,
Put on shoes of courage and lace them
With strings of hope.
I will stand firm, with my eyes
Fixed on the high, dry, green plains
Of success.

-Richard L. Dockery, '50

DETERMINED OPTIMIST

Fellow voyagers—why not live?
This world has much to give;
Never rush along life's way,
There's ample time to make it gay;
Do not let Fate interfere,
To all good things lend an ear.
Once the clock of life we wind,
Never knowing when we'll find
Hands upon it standing still,
So love, live, work—with a will.
Put more faith in a tomorrow
Though it bring you pain or sorrow.
Prolong life . . . We've got to live!
This cock-eyed world has lots to give!
—Dollie Marie Jefferson, '49

LONELINESS

I wanted you today.
In the rain I stood alone
And looked at the grey clouds,
Felt the raindrops on my face
And hardly knew whether they were raindrops

Or tears.

Where were you? Gone home?

I know I did not tell you,

But I needed you so terribly

I wonder that you did not sense my need

Or hear me call your name.

Countess W. Twitty, '49

CLASS POEM

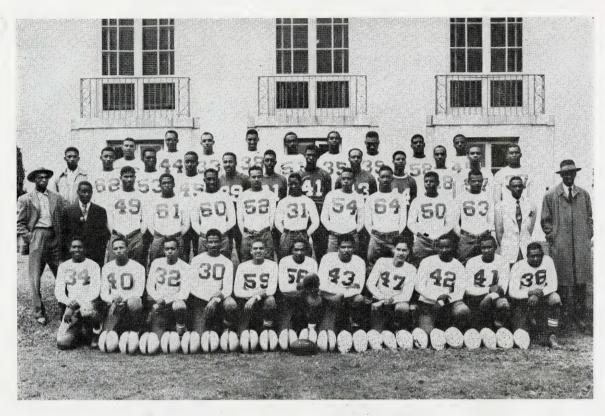

Written by Countess M. Twitty, '49, in honor of the Class of '48.

A group of credulous and wide-eyed youths In nineteen forty-four did seek for truths Further by entering these gracious halls, Their studies to pursue within these walls. Each one had his purpose, each his goal; And each one was to play a different role In coming years. Together now they stood And sought the common gain—the common good. I named them credulous, but do not say They were untouched by happenings of the day. Our country was at war, and some who came Went to that war and were not seen again. And some remembered them and wept, and some Resolved that nevermore would great wars come. And so began their years of earnest work, Their years of toil, and though a few did shirk The most of them remembered why they came And strove to realize their greatest aim. The first two years this infant class was taught Much the same things, and the main dream they sought Was put aside for future reference. But that they learned did fully recompense For its removal from their waking mind. Slowly these eager brains began to find New fields of thought, new vistas to explore, The key to open many an ancient door. They questioned this and that, they doubted all, And into common errors they did fall. They struggled out—they, faltering, followed through The mazes of their problems. And a few Gave up the fight and left the campus green. But others took their places, just as keen And just as eager as were those who left. Therefore this half-grown class was not bereft Of any of its talents. It still throve. So that the last two years this class now strove To justify its presence by a show Of knowledge. Fast and strong their powers did grow. A love for Dillard in them took deep roots. This University in their pursuits Had led and guided them along the way They chose to go. Had shown them day by day A way of life, of teaching—ideals high. A firm philosophy they could live by. They say to all those whom they leave behind Some contribution they'll make to mankind. They've learned with thoroughness. Ready now they stand To lead with wisdom peoples of this land.
